

Burn Pit Legislation Introduced by IAVA, Reps Mast, Gabbard at Historic Press Conference

May 17, 2018 (Washington, DC) – Today on Capitol Hill, Iraq and Afghanistan Veterans of America (IAVA), the leading post-9/11 veterans empowerment organization, stood united with dozens of veterans organizations, veterans exposed to burn pits, and Representatives Brian Mast (R-FL) and Tulsi Gabbard (D-HI) for a historic press conference focused what could be the Agent Orange of our generation. Mast and Gabbard served in Afghanistan and Iraq themselves—and united across party lines to put country and their fellow veterans above any political differences. The group called on all members of Congress to sign on to the bill before Memorial Day at the end of this month.

IAVA member and Army veteran, Christina Thundathil, powerfully shared her painful personal story: “If God does not give me a miracle I will die. My death will be attributed to lung disease, pulmonary hypertension, Gulf war Syndrome, and beginning stages of dementia which is further compounded by small vessel disease. Most of what I have is attributable to the burn pits of Balad, Iraq. Daily I burned the human waste of my battalion with jet fuel. Pass the Burn pit legislation to ensure that no veteran has to suffer in silence.”

IAVA, Mast, Gabbard and their allies introduced the critical Burn Pits Accountability Act (H.R. 5671). This bipartisan legislation would study servicemembers' exposure to open burn pits and toxic airborne chemicals to begin the process of understanding, assessing, and treating these service-related ailments.

IAVA also released a powerful 30-second ad to serve as a wake-up call to all Americans. The ad was created pro-bono by innovative Los Angeles-based advertising firm, David & Goliath and their CEO and IAVA Board Member, David Angelo—himself the son of a World War II veteran. The ad will be distributed national and can be found online here:

“Burn pits may be our generation’s Agent Orange. From the time we were founded 15 years ago, our members told us they were concerned and that sense of urgency has only grown. 80% report that they were exposed to burn pits during their combat deployments and 63% report associated symptoms already. They feel like they haven’t been heard, that the public doesn’t understand, and that we need action. That’s why we’re here today – to relaunch our campaign to raise awareness about what burn pits are, what our members have been exposed to, and to stand with allies to get something done. It’s an important first salvo in what could be a fight to last a generation” said IAVA Founder and CEO Paul Rieckhoff.

The VA estimates 3.5 million veterans are eligible to register in the VA's Airborne Hazards and Open Burn Pit Registry, which tracks exposures to airborne toxins.

"When I was serving in Afghanistan, trash and human waste were often burned in open air pits. I think it's quickly becoming clear that these burn pits are emerging as the Agent Orange of my generation. Service members that were exposed in Iraq and Afghanistan are seeing terrible health effects at a very young age. These men and women risked their lives for our country, and this bipartisan legislation will go a long way toward getting them the care they have earned," said Congressman Brian Mast, Republican from Florida.

"Whether serving in Iraq or Afghanistan, our post-9/11 veterans were exposed to open-air burn pits, often for many hours a day. Some veterans who I deployed with are now falling sick with cancer and other illnesses. But, there is no research and data about exposure to burn pits and other toxic chemicals, and how they have impacted the health and well-being of our servicemembers and their families. Our bipartisan legislation will evaluate exposure to burn pits and other hazardous airborne chemicals to ensure our servicemembers and veterans receive the treatment and services they earned and deserve" said Congresswoman Tulsi Gabbard of Hawaii.

"I served more than five years in Iraq and Afghanistan," said retired General and IAVA Board Member, David H. Petraeus, whose service included serving as Commander of Multi-National Force-Iraq (MNF-I) during the Surge of 2007-2008 and as Commander of the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) during the Surge in Afghanistan of 2010-2011 in a statement. "I was concerned about the effects of burn pits on our soldiers and civilians then (and raised those concerns at the time), and I continue to be concerned about the effects on those who spent periods in either country exposed to the smoke from waste pits and other sources....I hope all members of Congress will stand with IAVA and our Iraq and Afghanistan veterans and support this important bill.”

Support for injuries from burn pits and other toxic exposures is one of IAVA’s Big 6 Advocacy priorities for 2018, focused on for the Post-9/11 generation of veterans, and veterans of all eras.
